Low Canadian Exchange Rates Make Canadian Coach Training Courses More Accessible than their US Counterparts.

New location will support continued growth of ICF approved coach training locally as well as internationally.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada – Canadian coaching school, Interpersonal Wellness Services Inc. \(IWS\), is inviting US and international students and business to capitalize on the low Canadian exchange rate.

Not everyone sees the low Canadian dollar as a bad thing. A Canadian consulting and training firm is inviting US and International businesses and individuals searching for coach training, professional development or workplace wellness services to consider Canadian expertise at a fraction of the cost, due to the low Canadian dollar.

This week, the Canadian dollar is trading at 0.74 US Dollar. This means that US and International organizations choosing Canadian markets can gain the same high level services at competitive rates.

Joyce Odidison, MA, PCC, president and training director of Interpersonal Wellness Services says they have recently expanded their Leadership Wellness & Life Coaching Institute, which now allows them to serve more US and international businesses and coaching students.

“We now offer up to 60 courses and 2 certifications that are approved by the International Coach Federation (ICF), the largest governing body for coaches around the world. Our company provides in-person and interactive online learning onsite and offsite for our clients globally”.

Interpersonal Wellness Services (IWS) has been serving clients for almost 20 years and was incorporated in 2010, as part of its strategy to meet performance development, workplace wellness and leadership coaching needs for organizations. The company started providing coaching certifications in 2008.
